In the book Outliers, Malcolm Gladwell, the writer, said it takes about 10,000 hours of practice to be good in a language. So, 43. , it will take us 5,000 days, or 13.7 years, to be able to use the language as a native speaker.

Two hours for 13 years! Many English learners will be scared by this number. Some may give up before the second year. However, do people really need to be so good at English to communicate with another person?

Jean-Paul Nerriere, who once worked for IBM, answered “No” to this. By cutting down the number of English words from hundreds of thousands to 1,500 and making grammar simpler, Nerriere brought to the world Globish, or Global English. He believes 44., one can successfully communicate with those who are not native speakers. This is good news. It takes only 182 hours to be good in Globish. One who learns Globish for two hours a day will be able to use it without problems in three months.

However, not everyone is interested in Globish. For people who want to get good grades on TOEFL or TOEIC tests, 45. And those who enjoy going deeper into a language will still work hard on English day by day. (文章擷取自 Reading with Joy)
